"We were all in the Pickel Building and we were trying out for our spring showcase when we heard from the radio that there were some tornado warnings. So I went outside with bunch of the guys and we saw the sky was a greenish gray color.

When we went back inside, it had started raining really hard. We went back out a little later to see if the sky had changed, and when we did, we looked over the roof of the Pickel building and we saw the funnel clouds starting to form in the sky. Then we ran back inside and told everyone to get in the bathroom.

Shortly thereafter, we started hearing hail coming down on the roof, we heard debris flying around, and the wind was starting to pick up and the building was starting to shake.

We went back outside when we thought it was safe and we saw Gallatin Road had been demolished. All the car dealerships and the gas stations had been destroyed, and there were a few cars turned over in the road.

It was crazy; it was the most terrifying experience I have ever had in my life."
